

Antenna House Licensing

Perpetual vs. Subscription License

Antenna House offers perpetual and subscription licensing options for our software.

Perpetual is a one-time purchase of a license that allows end users to use the software for as long as they comply with all terms of the license agreement. Annual maintenance is optional.

Subscription is a term-based license that allows the end user to use the software for a specified license period so long as the end user complies with the terms of the license agreement. At the end of the subscription period, the end user must stop using the software or renew and extend the license period.

Please note: The subscription license requires a 12-month commitment and the end user cannot opt out until the subscription period ends. The subscription license includes maintenance and support for the duration of the subscription.

If the end user wants to convert to a perpetual license during the subscription period, they will receive credit from the subscription license towards the purchase of a new perpetual license. Please note that the used maintenance period will be deducted from the credit.

To place an order or to inquire about periods less than 12 months, contact sales@antennahouse.com.

Standalone vs. Server License

Standalone license is for use by a single end user on one machine (desktop computer or laptop). One standalone license is required for each computer that will run Antenna House software. The standalone license cannot be used on a server and cannot be accessed by other computers directly or indirectly connected to the licensed machine.

Server license is for use on a central system that enables multiple users and client machines to access and run Antenna House software. A server license runs on a server computer and licensed per processor (CPU). We do not count cores. If the server has multiple processors and all of them are dedicated to run Antenna House software, it will require a server license for the first processor and additional processor licenses for subsequent processors.

Application Service Provider (ASP) License

ASP license allows businesses who provide applications to end users over a network to use Antenna House software. ASP license is only available for Office Server Document Converter (OSDC) and licensed per processor. ASP license includes annual maintenance and set for a 12-month period. At the end of the period, the ASP license must be renewed for continued application use; otherwise it will terminate.